SUNDAY
SEPTEMBER 26, 1954

Left Orly at ten this morning in John Hughes' plane, with Mardi, a Norwegian, a Dane and wife, and a Portuguese, all from NATO. Strong headwinds delayed us and we were aloft almost two hours before reaching Northolt. I went to Nancy Lancaster's house, then lunched at the Connaught with the Hugheses.

David had a paroxysm of coughing this morning and I am disquieted about him. His mother and Micheline have had almost no sleep this week because of tending him.

It is raining, of course, in London, but somewhat warmer than in Paris. Took a promenade through the deserted Sunday streets.

I dined with Lauder Greenway at the Berkeley Hotel. We talked a lot about darling Audrey.
